The iPad has finally made its way to the classroom, and now into the kitchens too!

Philadelphia, PA- August 27, 2010

Starting this Monday, August 30, 2010, all incoming Associate and Bachelor students will begin their college experience way ahead of the curve at The Restaurant School at Walnut Hill College. While other students will be waiting in long lines to purchase their academic books this year, the college's new iPad program will help alleviate that process and allow them the luxury of lightening their backpacks.

Being one of only eleven total schools in the nation to roll out this iPad initiative for this September 2010, The Restaurant School at Walnut Hill College is excited to be on the cutting edge of technology. Karl Becker, Vice President of College Advancement states, "Man has been cooking since the dawn of time, but only now has informational technology played a pivotal role in the customer's experience as well as in the delivery of education to our students. We are definitely on the precipice of an educational revolution."

Specific to the hospitality field, the students will now have the ability to virtually design a cake, menu, and even hotel room as this new technology enhances the practical hands-on learning experience. With just a tap of the screen, students will be able to instantly open up to any chapter or highlight the many recipes in their hospitality books that are pre-loaded onto their iPads, which they will keep upon graduation. Equally as important, the faculty and Chef Instructors will be able to contact all students at once in real time format. What better time management is there than catching up on a missed class through a podcast while waiting for the bus or walking to class?

The Restaurant School at Walnut Hill College offers four majors in Culinary Arts, Hotel Management, Pastry Arts, and Restaurant Management. A real life, interactive educational experience is offered in a bustling restaurant environment in the heart of University City, Philadelphia. This combination of scholastic and professional experience positions The Restaurant School at Walnut Hill College graduates ahead of their peers pursuing careers in the restaurant and hotel industry.
